Perspectives on Dress Code

By Caleb Barney

In many schools there are a set of rules we follow, whether it helps us organize the community and give order for the economy. The most rules that is important to all school is dress codes, a daily professional dress up day where students may learn how to adapt for upcoming careers in the future. We ask ourselves what is the purpose of a dress code and how does it improve in our school, why or why not? Many students and staff know the purpose of a dress code is because of the safety not only for our school, but for students as well. The assistant principal, assumes that the dress code's purpose is to detect whether its our own students or uninvited guests that brings high risk for our environment. She claims that we can know which students belong and even those who don't belong in school.

Also claims how being the same as everyone else can make some students fit into society. This year large percent of students follow the dress code respectfully and a small percent of students do not, if they do not follow it they will be given a referral and a Bengal shirt, or overnight suspension. Every morning before the bell rings for class security, some staff members, including the principal look and discuss with students who are out of dress code or are wearing a non-Bengal hoody. Another staff member agrees with the dress code such as Chief Sanchez that always remind the students to remove their hood in school. Chief Sanchez is a good respectful staff member in Gallup High School that agrees that the dress code's purpose is to secure students for their safety and help you in a career where you must follow procedures or make you look professional. So far the dress code has been improving in the school for students in a safe environment. Many students we see today in our school who don't follow this code wear ripped jeans and out of code hoodies.

Gallup Teen Health Clinic Offers Services

By Zachary Wargo

Many of you may not know, but we have a building that is located behind V-Wing which is called the Gallup Teen Health Clinic that offers medical and health services to any student, staff, and faculty that works and attends any Gallup McKinley County School.

The significance of this building that is behind Gallup High is important as any student can seek help, and can get sports physicals done at any given moment. This building is also helpful to anyone who needs counseling or needs someone to speak to about mental health issues.

The Teen Health Clinic is open every Tuesday for behavioral health and medical services from 8:30 A.M. through 3:30 P.M., it's important to always put your mental and physical health first, as this is a great way to look after yourself and to make sure you are living a healthy life as school continues to go on.
