How many times have you been asked, “What do you want to be when you grow up?” How will you decide?

Of course, you’ll think about what you’re interested in. You’ll also consider what you excel at. Reading is one of the most important job skills. For most entry-level jobs, you’ll need to read documents with Lexile® ranges of 1090L to 1425L.

You’ll probably also want to consider how much you’ll get paid. In 2014, doctors, dentists, psychiatrists, CEOs and other top business executives, engineers, and computer systems managers took home the largest paychecks. Most of those jobs require more education, and many are in health care.

You’ll also want to consider how easy it is to get and keep a particular job. The jobs that are expected to have the most new openings between 2014 and 2024 are personal and home health aides, registered nurses, food preparation and service workers, and retail salespersons. Many of these jobs are in health care. Many of them require little education, but they also offer less pay.

Let’s look at 10 careers. Some of them are among the highest paying. Some of them are among the most common. Some of them will probably have the most growth. Which appeal most to you?
