Mrs. Gentzler's Weekly Challenge!

Mrs. Wakeland provided a poem on the back of the newsletter. This weeks challenge is to come up with a good title for Mrs. Wakeland's poem. Along with the title needs to be a summary of why that title is appropriate. I will take all entries submitted to Mrs. Wakeland for her to chose the winner. Remember the student from each grade level that Mrs. Wakeland chooses will receive a prize.
Good Luck!

Teacher's Corner

Reading classes have been working on poetry so Mrs. Wakeland decided to write a poem:

There was a boy who came to school,
He laughed and played and he was cool.
Because he didn't like to read,
He thought school was a joke and never saw the need
To learn and always try his best
He did not care until the test.

The test had words like infer and summary
All he could think of were jokes he thought funny-ary
Of course he could never rhyme
He had never taken the time
To listen to what the teacher said
He just wanted to go back to bed.
But all day it was maps, graphs, compare and contrast
He was like, come on give it a rest.

Until he sat next to sweet Cindy Lou
She was pretty, nice and smelled good too.
"Pay attention and listen in class," she said
"I'll sit by you at lunch instead"
Of going with the girls she knew
She sat by me and we talked it through.
She asked what class was my best
I could only then confess, "recess".

"That's a shame, you're smarter than that.
You're cute too, but grades are where it's at.
I like guys who show they care,
About themselves and the welfare
Of all the students in their class
They do a lot so all will pass."

I asked Cindy Lou to help me out,
To make sure I listened and then found out,
I was as smart as she said
And no longer wanted to stay home in bed.

There was a boy who came to school
And read and listened and learned too.
