Family Learning Series

2018-2019

This year the Family Learning Series turns 5 years old! Last year we hosted some very successful events to help our families learn more about the math and science programming we use at the elementary level. This year we are planning some family-oriented events to help you support your child at home. Research has shown that parent involvement can increase school achievement, improve school attendance and help with essential social skills. This school year we will again host our family events and we hope you will join us! We are in the process of scheduling and planning for these events. The dates and topics for this year's Family Learning Series are as follows:

Tuesday, November 27, 2018 (known as "Giving Tuesday"): Give the Gift of Reading (Grades K-5)

Tuesday, April 16, 2019: Family Math Night (Grades K-5)

Wednesday, May 22, 2019: Preventing the Summer Slide (Grades K-8)

More information will be forthcoming for the Family Learning Series including location for each event and registration information, but in the meantime, I hope you will set these dates aside to come out and learn with your children. Please consider joining us for some very informative and hands on evenings designed to share instructional program information and practices that your children are using this year!
