40 PUBLIC HIGH SCHOOL JUNIORS STATEWIDE HONORED IN ANNUAL ISLANDER SCHOLARS PROGRAM

HONOLULU, HI – Forty high school juniors statewide will be honored this summer as their school’s “Islander Scholar,” in the third annual program that recognizes students for their character and commitment to upholding the values of Hawai‘i.

The Islander Scholars of Kaua‘i are Shyli Lacaden of Waimea High School and Charlene Tan of Kaua‘i High School.

Islander Scholars, created in 2016 by Islander Institute and Mālama Learning Center, grew out of a desire to honor students who demonstrate a deep commitment to Hawai‘i and who care for the well-being of their schools, families, and communities as much as or more than their own individual pursuits. The criteria for this award go far beyond typical measures like grades, test scores, and extracurricular activities.

“The test for measuring an Islander Scholar is life itself,” said Andrew Aoki, co-founder of Islander Institute and father of two public school students in Kailua. “These remarkably resilient students are truly educated. They are the product of a whole school community working together to prepare them not just for college, but for leading a positive island life. Islander Scholars give us a glimpse of the full potential of public education in Hawai‘i.”

Principals at traditional and charter public high schools were invited to select one junior as their school’s Islander Scholar based on six comprehensive learning outcomes rooted in Hawai‘i. These outcomes—collectively called Nā Hopena A‘o and adopted as policy by the state Board of Education—include a sense of Belonging, Responsibility, Excellence, Aloha, Total Well-Being, and Hawai‘i, spelling out BREATH or HĀ in Hawaiian. Principals were given sole discretion to develop a selection process, with many involving teachers, counselors, and others in discussions about the students in their school.

“More schools, principals, teachers, and community members are engaging in meaningful ways that are strengthening HĀ outcomes,” said Cheryl Ka‘uhane Lupenui, co-founder of Islander Scholars and the former BOE member who led the development of Nā Hopena A‘o. “Islander Scholars is a community catalyst for realizing our goals of public education in Hawai‘i.”

As part of this honor, all 40 Islander Scholars will come together for the Islander Scholars Academy at Camp Pālehua from June 1 to 3 in Kapolei—a special experience for scholars to learn from each other, participate in ‘āina-based and cultural learning activities, build leadership skills, and make lifelong connections with past Islander Scholars and island leaders.

“I not only learned about students and teachers from all around the pae ‘āina, but I also learned quite a lot about myself,” said 2017 Islander Scholar Paisley Richards, who recently graduated from Hālau Kū Māna. “From discussing personal buried topics to individual leadership qualities in each of the students, I learned how much power each of us there held within us. As a result from going to this amazing program, I now view myself as more of a leader. Before I came to this program, I saw myself only as a follower, so the amount of development that I went through within those three short days was incredible.”

Many community groups are working together to put together a once-in-a-lifetime experience for the 2018 Islander Scholars. Kamehameha Schools has been a major partner, providing both funding and leadership. Other partners include Ho‘olā Mokauea, Kōkua Kalihi Valley, Consuelo Foundation, Kualoa-He‘eia Ecumenical Youth Project, The Kohala Center, and HMSA Foundation. Partners providing funding for the program include Alaska Airlines, Harold K.L. Castle Foundation, Hawai‘i Government Employees Association, Honu‘apo, Hawai‘i State Teachers Association, HEI Charitable Foundation, and Nā Lei Aloha Foundation.

“The people of Hawai‘i are yearning to rediscover the things that allowed our islands to thrive,” said Alapaki Nahale-a, Senior Director of Regional Strategies for Kamehameha Schools on Hawai‘i Island. “Islander Scholars are the leaders we have been looking for. They quietly sacrifice for family and community in the same way that our ancestors did for all of us.”

All Islander Scholars are expected to return to their schools and communities in their senior year to uphold the values of the program and to serve as role models for their peers.
