Women's History Month Mary Stevenson Cassatt (1844–1926) is best known for her paintings of mothers and children. She became a successful professional artist at a time when it was very difficult for a woman to do so. After studying art in Philadelphia, Cassatt wanted to return on her own to Paris, then the center of the modern art world. She struggled to convince her parents, since this was a highly unusual undertaking for a young woman. They eventually agreed. Once in Paris, Cassatt studied art on her own, visiting museums across Europe and training in the studios of established artists. The main art school in Paris, the École des Beaux-Arts, did not accept female students at that time. Among the impressionists, she was one of three women—and the only American.
