First-ever statewide Student Advisory Council created in Utah

Juniors and seniors are invited to apply for seat on the council

SALT LAKE CITY— The Utah State Board of Education voted Thursday to create a Student Advisory Council that will provide suggestions and feedback to the 15-member elected body.

In a unanimous vote, the Board approved an internal policy establishing the council, which is the first of its kind in Utah. The council will include 15 juniors and seniors who will represent the same geographical areas represented by each member of the Board.

Board Member Linda Hansen, District 3, brought the idea to the full Board after she was approached by a student advocating for the involvement of student voices in statewide education policy decisions.

“The Board makes better decisions when we hear many different points of view, and the students’ viewpoint is one that we have been missing. Their perspective is incredibly valuable,” Hansen said. “When the education community listens to all voices, it is more cohesive and that is when we see the very best things happen in education.”

The Student Advisory Council will meet at least every other month to discuss how decisions made at the state level affect students. Membership will be split between grades 11 and 12.

Students can find the application at <https://schools.utah.gov/board/participation/advisorygroups/sac>. To be considered, students must be 16 and a junior or senior. Applications are due Friday, October 5, 2018.
